PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION:

This is a Federal house at the corner of Royal Oak and Stenton. The core of the house was built c. 1800 and is two stories tall. It has wood shingles and an end chimney; the walls and chimney are stuccoed. The windows are double hung with shutters. An extension off the back of the house has a slightly higher roofline but otherwise matches the pattern of stucco siding, windows with shutters, and wood shingles. This extension has a larger interior end chimney in the gable end and frieze band windows (which were common in the Greek Revival era). Off the gable end of the extension is a two-story addition with a slightly smaller profile. There is also a one-story addition off the core. A small-enclosed entry porch with a shed roof appears at the juncture of the core and the extension. The whole house is clad in stucco and is well-maintained.

Associated Resources: (1) Stone Barn. This large stone and frame barn, built with uncoursed stone, has a stone shed addition. Modern garage doors have been added to the lower entryways into the barn. The windows are irregularly placed; those in the shed addition have a stone jack arch. The roof is covered with wood shingles.

(2) Stone spring house.

Classification: The loss of context due to development make this house is a Class II resource.
